Meeting 3 (11/15)

- Homepage
    - Introduction header should be below the fold
    - I would love to have a background image above the fold (or incorporate tilted imagery like you have done on the rest of the site) - here are some images I like if you want to either use or take inspiration from them

- -     - I like the nav on the left but make sure it doesn't cover any of the photos
    - For the "Start Listening" section, use all polaroid-style photos and label them in case the user isn't able to tell what season it represents
- Nav

    - I like the color change on hover, but add additional styling to indicate which page the user is currently on (bold, color, etc.)
- Internal pages
    - Increase z-index of nav so that things go behind it when you scroll
    - Add nav functionality at the bottom of the page to go to the next/previous season page
    - The single photo looks good to me so I'm fine with keeping it as 1 photo per section of the sonnet!
    - I like the idea of trying to connect the photo to the scene described in the sonnet if possible
- Footer
    - You have a margin around the entire html body, which is creating space between the footer and the edges of the page. Try adjusting the margins to get rid of this space because the floating footer looks a little strange
